

The Interaction between the Narrator and the Reader in George Oppen's Poetry

by

Kohei Ashida

A thesis submitted to

The Graduate School of Literature and the Human Sciences

Osaka Metropolitan University

in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of

Master of Arts

January 2024

Contents

Introduction 1

Chapter 1 The Earlier Poetry 9

Oppen in the 1930s and his contemporaries, including the Objectivists and other poets..... 9

The “window” as a motif of boundary that constrains and shelters people 13

Generic relationships and the reader’s participation into the poetic process 17

The narrator as observer and perspective setter 18

Chapter 2 The Middle Poetry 27

Evaluation of the hiatus period and the poetry after that 27

Clarification of the narrator’s psychological perspective on things ... 32

The relationship between historical figures and the narrator 36

Humans’ encounter with animals as the absolute other 37

Chapter 3 The Later Poetry 44

Complexity of the changes in the later poetry 44

Poetry that includes the history and the transitional character of “Of Being Numerous”	47
Emphasis on the presence of the narrator in later poems	52
Open-orientedness of the later Oppen poetry	53
Motif of wholeness that transcends the human	55
The open-endedness and the distance between the narrator and the reader.	60
Conclusion	68
Notes	72
Works Cited	75